Voices of Creativity: Exploring the Poetry Corner

Lily Grown from the Ashes

Flourished with immense care
But tangled in petty clashes
Deemed to be on God's hair
The lily grown from the ashes

But falling into the envy's snare
It was now scrutinized by all
Couldn't push oneself for victual, was left bare
Outcast by the world, saw the fall

"Might be infested by the bug"
The grower feared a lot
"Or might be too fragile"
Other lilies shrug
On verge of stake, the lily cried,
"I am worth a shot"
Whispering prayers the grower tried and sighed

The lily grew at her rate
Other lilies went to florist but she did wait
Time passed she was born pale
However, after a long wait
The ship finally sailed

Nothing could stop the rapture of this lily fair
Other lilies stamped deserted on road,
This one got her place on God's hair
Took her time, she wasn't like the masses
After all, she was the lily grown from the ashes

Jahanvi Chaturvedi

Human and their love for escapism,
To run from lies, from the things they do.
To hide from pain, from crowd, from cry,
To drift where dreams of silence lie.

The best luxury human owns,
Is not gold, nor a throne.
It's the gift to leave, to escape, to let things go,
To breathe where no one needs to know.

Escapism is not to run away from fate,
But to feel light, to breathe, to abate.

Every heart, strong and weak,
Holds a wish to always seek.
It is the peace as of silent shore-
It is the sweetest gift we all adore.
